

NEIGHBORHOOD STORIES

When I die, said Calliope Marsh, dont you get anybody thats always treated me like a dog and put them on the front seat. Make em sit back. Then she looked at me, her rare and somewhat abashed smile on her face. Birds and stars and children and God in the world, she said, and hark at me talking like that. Honest, I dont care where you seat em. That is like Calliope. And that is like the village. Blunt and sometimes bitter speech there is, and now and again what we gently call words; but the faith of my experience is that these are facile, and need never trouble one. These are born of circumscription, of little areas, of teasing tasks, of lack of exercise, of that curious mingling which we call social life; but any one who takes seriously our faint feuds or even our narrow judgments does not know and love the Middle Western villages, nor understand that seeds and buds are not the norm of bloom. Instance, if you will, this case and that to show the contrary. But the days of pioneering, when folk drew together in defense, left us a heritage which no isolated instances can nullify. On the whole, we are all friends. It is Calliope Marsh who tells, in her own speech, these Neighborhood Stories. And if she were given to selecting texts, I think that she would have selected one which says that life is something other than that which we believe it to be. 1 A Great Tree 2 Exit Charity 3 The Time has Come 4 The Face of Friendship Village 5 The Flood 6 The Party 7 The Biggest Business 8 The Prodigal Guest 9 Mr. Dombledon 10 Human 11 The Homecoming
